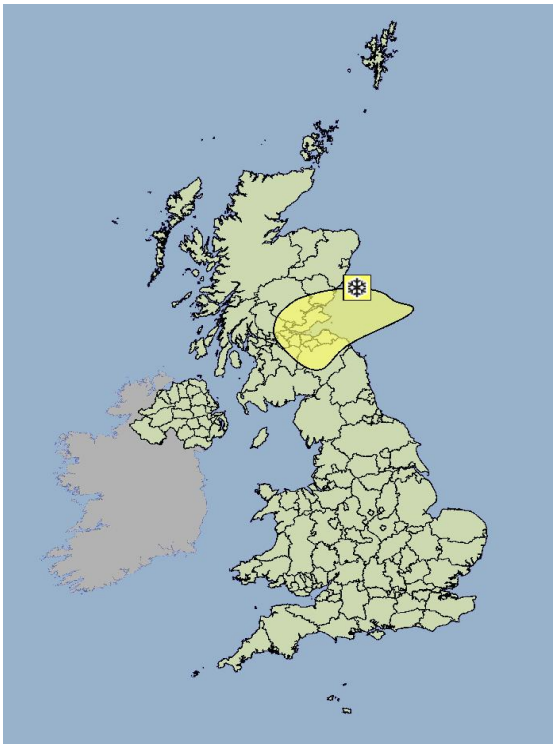
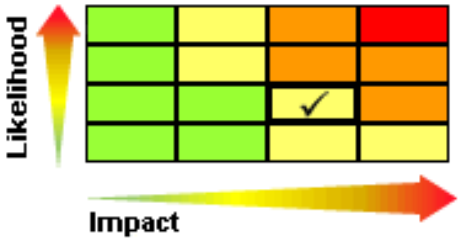
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A depression is expected to cross northern parts of Northern England later on Thursday and into Friday bringing a slow-moving band of rain, sleet and snow into the area on Thursday evening. This is likely to come to a halt somewhere across eastern Scotland, though there are differences between models in the position which brings uncertainty about location, with latest indications that it is likely to be further south than previously expected. In addition, there are uncertainties about the lowest level to which snow will fall, which could be 100 m either side of heights quoted in the warning.

This warning will be kept under review and may be updated.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Alert of Snow

Valid from 00:05 on Fri, 29th Apr 2016 until 15:00 on Fri, 29th Apr 2016

This is an update to the warning issued on Wednesday to bring the area on concern further south.

A spell of persistent and at times heavy snow is expected for parts of eastern Scotland starting on Thursday night and lasting into Friday. By Friday morning, accumulations of 5-10 cm are likely above about 100 m with 15 cm or more possible above 200 m.

At lower levels and near coasts an uncertain mix of rain and snow is expected, with rain likely to predominate, bringing the risk of standing water on roads.

Please be aware of the risk of dangerous driving conditions and disruption to transport.
